CUSORY34

Culous OBSERVATIONS

OF

Mr. Ab-1 R--er,

Upon a late

Famous PAMPHLET,

ENTITULED,

REMARKS

ONTHE

Preliminary Articles

Offer'd by the F. K. in hopes to procure a

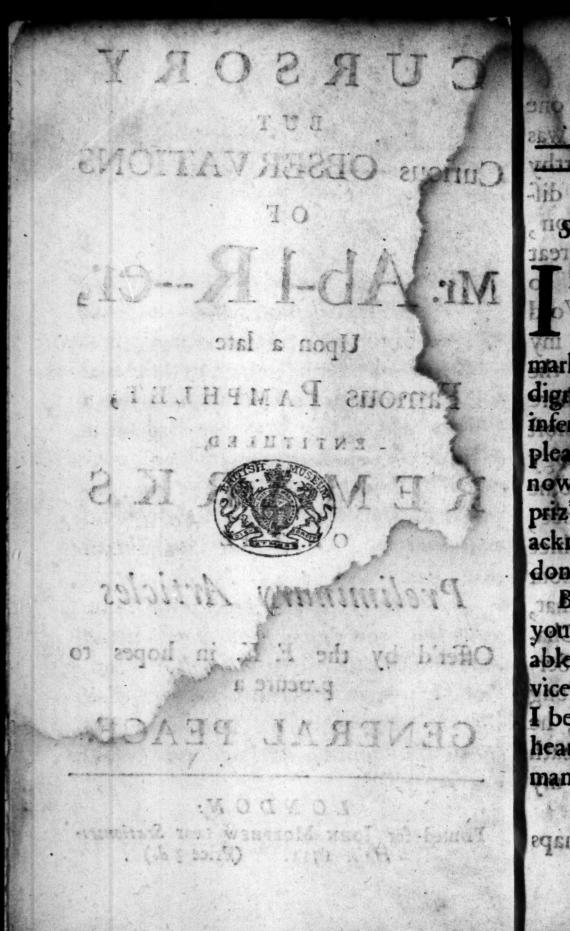

GENERAL PEACE.

LONDON

Printed for John Morphew near Stationers.

Hall, 1711. (Price 3 d.)

Acres 14

It was on Wednesday laft, when one of my Servants came to me, as I was taking my Chocolate with a worthy Member of the Osober-Chib, and difpoling Affairs for the next, Affen and whilper'd me, that a certain great Have not indeed the Fortune to be personally known to you, yet fince you are pleas'd in your Remarks to take some notice of me, and dignifie me with an Epithet, not much inferior to those, you are so often pleased to confer upon the most Renown'd Princes, you will not be furprizid at the Receipt of a Letter to acknowledge the Favour you have done me did w ai bihildug flot

But, Sir, That you may not value your felf too much upon your being able to call me from the Publick Service, I solemnly declare to you, had I been lest to my self, you had never heard My Opinion of your late Performe to do a piece of Inflice sonem

Perhaps

felf in the most open magner. A 2

It

It was on Wednesday last, when one of my Servants came to me, as I was taking my Chocolate with a worthy Member of the October-Club, and difposing Affairs for the next Session, and whisper'd me, that a certain great Lord, whose Name I am defir'd to conceal, pray'd the Favour of a Word with me. I excus'd my felf to my Friend, and immediately went to the Cabinet in my North Apartment, where I found his L-p under the utmost Concern. After some little Apology he told me, the Affair he was come about was of the last Consequence, that there was a virulent Pamphlet just publish'd, in which my Honour and Reputation was attempted; that, as he knew the preserving my Character entire, wou'd be of infinite Service to the Interest I have so long espoused, and so nobly defended, he hop'd I wou'd not think it beneath me to do a piece of Justice to my felf in the most open manner.

Perhaps

in

ren

if I

Ch

rigl

An

on

vei

in

tre

fine

dit

ne

dio

the

lea

as

of

Perhaps I might have got the better of this Importunity, had not a Letter in that Instant arriv'd from a Reverend Prelate, earnestly beseeching me, if I had any Love or Regard for the Church of England, to set my self right, and vindicate my Fame in an Answer to your Remarks.

And thus, Sir, was I prevail'd upon; Your ill Usage of me cou'd never have moved me, tho' 'tis evident in what an insolent manner you have treated both me and the King of France. Pag. 7. The French King's Insincerity; pag. 16. Roper tells us, and ditto, Prostituted Scribler, and in the next Paragraph, his Majesty is Persidious, and breaks all Oaths, &c. in p. 21. I am call'd Abel, without the least respect to the Station I bear in the present M----y.

I grant you, Sir, you call'd me learned Abel, but 'tis in such a manner, as I am confident you make a Ridicule of my Parts and Learning.

A 3

Buc

ps

blO

one

was

rthy

dif-

on,

reat

to ord

my

the

ere

flor

pgy

me

ce,

let

our

at,

ha-

er-

ong

he ath

my

However, Sir, give one of these Prostitutes leave to examine your Remarks, and perhaps you may not think me so contemptible. And,

First, Sir, I wou'd ask you why you are so over-joy'd at your setting out, that the King of France professes a Willingness to a Peace, when in p. 14. you are sure he is no Slave to his Word, and 'tis therefore impossible to treat with him. Perhaps it is, because it shews what he is reduced to; but then, Sir, if this Willingness, shou'd at last come to No Willingness, and it would have been a better Proof of his Willingness, had he propos'd the Old

Ol that hav be

is in hea

ter haj

me

for it is fur in upo the following the follo

to Ne

he

to pro he

de

eir

if

eir

eir

le-

ri-

ele

le-

nk

ou

qt,

il-

4.

to

ise

ut

i'd nd

of

he ld

Old Preliminaries, I can't see what it is that overjoys you. Are you glad you have reason, as you say you have, to believe he intends to trifle, and only play the old Game over again? This is impossible, because Page ditto, you heartily wish he had proposed the Old Prelim. Art. You are sure then Matters wou'd have been conducted to a happy Issue.

But, Sir, e'er I go on with you, let me observe to you your strong Reason for the F. K—'s Insincerity, and it is, because you observe to your great surprise his Most Christian Majesty rises in his Demand, talks stont, and insists upon ten to one more than he did in the Old Prelim and therefore it must follow, according to your Logick, that he can't possibly be willing at Heart, to make Peace with us upon these New Prelim.

New Prelim.

But besides this, you are at a stand to know what he means, when he promises all that is in his Power, no A 4 one one can understand what he wou'd be at, however you, Sir, within a Line of two after suppose he means so and so. Now, Sir, if you'l be so kind to your self, as to apply a little of that Reason that helpt you to your supposition, to your Understanding, 'tis an even Wager but you find out what he means.

yo

be

tel

me

N

Fr

us

be

W

R

th

di

to

Bu

go

clo

lo

w

lu

rit

The first Article of the New Preliminaries dislikes you, because of the great difference betwixt that, and the 5th of the Old Preliminaries.

Now for difference.

knowledge the Succession of the Crown of Great Britain in the Protestant Line. New, will acknowledge. Old, Crown of G. B. New, Queen of G. B. Old, as it is settled by Ast of Parliament. New, according to the present Settlement. Now, Sir, whatever difference you have Remark'd, depend upon it, if the Words of the New are too weak to hold his Majesty, those of the Old are not

be

10

fo.

our

fon

on,

ven

he

eli-

he

he

Nn

ne.

vn

ld.

zt.

le-

DU

he

to

rę

ot

not fufficiently strong. Hence I remark, That in page 1. one Trifle can please you, and in page 12. another displease you. But this difference ought not to be term'd, a Nicety; for in France you tell us, what we call the present Settlement, is by some thought no Settlement. Now, Sir, can we possibly help the French Partizans thinking different from us? or must not we call it, what it is, because some People imagine it to be, what it is not? If you have any private Reason to believe the French King will think better of the Settlement, according to Act of Parliament, if it be not too late, we will get it alter'd for you. But why, Sir, cannot present Settlement go down? To this you'l answer, very closely, that you know a Set of Fellows, that deny all Laws to be valid which have been made fince the Revolution, and who it was that acknowledg'd Her Majesties Power and Authority, as declar'd by a Statute in the 12th of Her Royal Uncle. Whence one may infer, that that Person by quoting a Statute made so many Years before the Revolution, is a French Partizan, and one who denies the validity of all be reguld; a Nicery; for in sanif, ewall

10

Sir, I cou'd never yet perceive any great harm in that Statute. Sure I am, if a certain body will but peruse it, be will no more revile her Majesty, and her Administration, but learn an Obedience, which he has hitherto been a Mranger to oved nov Il You as it is in

But while you are in this concern or rather making your nice Reflections, you wonder 3dly and 4thly, why this is not done, and that is not done; and in short, why the Preliminary Articles to a Peace, do not intirely inform you how the Peace is to be made, in respect to the Pretences of the feveral Allies? And yet, Sir, will you as confidently call it a scandalous Peace, as if you were affir'd you knew how it was to be mainaged, as well as you do the F. K-'s

, whi

Secrets, his willingness and unwillingness. Your Ki

the

na

yo

th

na

ag ha

na F

M

th

lic

ta

P

R

B

n

ME

are

10%

all

ny

m,

he

nd

be-

14

W

10

OH

is

nd

les

ou

a ol

ly

re al

10

ır

Your next wish is, that the French King in the second Article of the New. had spoke in the words of the 6th of the Old Preliminaries. To confent bona fide, is nothing, just and reasonable, you can't tell what to make of it, and therefore this second Article is much too narrow. Whereas in the 6th of the Old Preliminaries, it is stipulated (and agreed to by one side) that France sha'n't have an Inch of the Spanish Monarchy, nay nor any Prince of the House of France. This indeed may be true, but I don't find in this 6th Article, that his Majesty would oblige himself to take all just and reasonable Measures to bring this to pass. Wherefore I really believe, when he promises in the 2d Article of the New Preliminaries, bona fide, to take all just and reasonable Measures to prevent an Union of the Crowns of Spain and France, that the words Just and Reasonable have a very good meaning. But let them mean what they will, We must understand what they signisie before fore they'l do any good. Nor would you have show'd your self so much afraid of two words, had not your Prejudice run away with your Pen. Cefar (who by the by) cou'd write Pamphlets, without being call'd a prostituted Scribler) assures us, animus nibil valet, unless altogether free from Hatred, Rage, and Friendship, ab odio, ira, &c. and sait (obliene vilos b

When you come to the 4th Article you are struck all on a heap to find nothing but words, as if some of your Old Art. were composed of somewhat better, or that you had discovered a new Method of making Peace, in which Oaths and Promises were to have no hand, because they had done so much harm in a Collection of Treaties, printed 1710. by one 7. Darby for Andrew Bell.

In the 6th of the New, the French King prevaricates, and every body fees through it, which last I deny; for I know a certain Great Man that talk'd STOI

over

fc

h īt

D

cl

tc

W

fa

n

d

K

ri

[13.]

ald

ıch

ur

m-

n-

la-

io,

le

id

ur

at

a

n

e

h

7-

1– b

S

I

d

r

over this Article with Monsieur Mesonger, that try'd all he cou'd to see through it, but cou'd not do it. But why does the French King prevaricate so scandalously? Is it not because when he says, he'l demolish Dunkirk, he does not promise he will not rebuild it? But the Old Prelim. was aware of Dirnit Ædisicat, and tyed him down close.

In this Article you are so kind as to give us an Account of an infamous Treaty Our King Charles the Second made with the French King, when Dunkirk was delivered up to him, and to put us in mind, how some People with equal Modesty, can impute Infamy to one King, as others can, Felony to another. Pray, Sir, are you determin'd nothing shall separate Our King? if you are, I positively declare after Charles the Second, I'll add glorious Memory, and slit any Mans Nose that w'on't drink to it. Nay, Sir, I'll have a Toast more strongly worded, than that that lately drunk to a pious Divine in Ireland. But to your Question, Why does the King of France demand Money for Dunkirk ? Sir, if you are resolved that the word Equivalent shall signifie Money, as you seem to be, and that Money, Dutch Money; I can give you no answer. But I would willingly think it easy e nough, for the word Equivalent to fignific Towns with Fortifications, Castles and Canons If this can be, and the French King cou'd have any thing like this in his Head, why then I know who can better furnish out the Equivalent than the English. Otherwife the French King must doat strangely in his old Age, when he affirms, after what we have given for Bonchain, that we can't furnish out an E quivalent for a Town, suov is said.

In the 7th Article of the New Preliminary, he promises at the General Conference, all the Pretences of the several Allies shall be discuss'd bona that fide.

larg wh Ap

too

hai

for at no be > an ho yo no

bu Siz

kn pr se!

no

an de

fide. But this Article you think too large, as you did the 2d too narrow, which calls to my Remembrance the Apothegm of a right Reverend Pres late : Some are too young, and some too old, and so we shall have no body belongs to its, by realon of the grad

m,

le-

ou

/a.

m

0-uţ

et.

19 a-

ad

I I

he

17

e-

18, th to

e-

al

ie â

In this Section you have two Reafons why you are positive the F. K. is at his prevarications again. For does not Charles VI. Emperor, pretend to be Charles the Third King of all Spain; and are not his Pretences fair? And how will they be complied with? To your shrewd Question I answer, I am not certain, what may be pretended, but certain I am, that Charles the Sixth, the prefent Emperor, does not know one word of what the Allies promised Charles the Third. The prefent Emperor was then out of the way, nor cou'd Charles the Third find him, any more than he can now, the Kingdom he is looking after, an lies bloow

And now at last we are arriv'd at what will most gravel his Christian Majesty, and that is, how to be able to come off fairly, when he shall know Her Majesty's Pretences to the whole Crown of France, and that it certainly belongs to us, by reason of three or four Golden Fleur de Lys which the British Monarchs have for some Years past given for their Arms

This truly, if the King be in earnest, will be a fly Stroak, for a hundred to one, if he does not think that France is his, and that we shaln't offer to alledge our fair Pretences, and pop our Fleur des Lys upon him. Beside, you are so kind as to help us at a dead Lift, (shou'd he talk to us of a Salick Law,) and to instruct us, to enquire after the Salick Law of Spain. But, Sir, upon second Thoughts, I fancy, shou'd we ask him why the same Law was not in both Kingdoms, he wou'd tell us, because in one Govern-

D

di

N

an

W

le ly

or

he ars

A,

to

rce

al-

ur

ou

ad

ck

ire

ut,

У,

ne

he

òo-

rn-

vernment a Man wou'd have a Staff and a Pair of Shoes sent him, shou'd he offer to revile the State, by printing his infamous Remarks, when in another, he might pass for a Patriot', which is an Argument that Holland and England differ in their Laws, as well as Spain and France.

But your last Comfort, I suppose, is, that because the Parliament declar'd, and does declare, they will have all Spain for the House of Austria, no one will dare to keep Company in publick with Monsieur De B—ys, unless it be when he talks of redoubling the Forces.

Since, Sir, I have been so complaisant as to let Equivalent signific Dutch Money, pray let Parliament signisse Juncto, and then a Pin for their Declarations.

A little before you talk of concluding, you wou'd not have People think Nullum tempus occurrit Regi too much of up

no

of a Jest. As to my own Opinion, I protest I don't make a Jest of it, I really had it from an honest old Gentlemanlike Lawyer of the Inner-Temple, that was never much given to jesting, though perhaps he, or his Chaplain, cou'd have found one, for any one that wou'd have dar'd to have disputed the Truth of this Maxim; whether it can be serviceable to the French K- to make a Jest, or no Jest of it, I cannot yet judge. Sure I am, if it be a Jest to any among us, 'tis to those only, who made the Old Prelim. Art. too much a Jest, and the Nation too long their Fools.

And now, Sir, I shall make my Bow, assuring you, in short, that I am considently persuaded, it is not intended to give the Lyon's Share to the Dog in the Fable; and that, if you go on to grumble against a Peace, only betause you cannot have your own Friend to make it, I will compare you in

[19]

in my first publick Paper to a halfwitted Fellow, who chose to go naked, because his old Taylor was taken up for a Pick-Pocket, and could work no longer for him.

t

5 ŀ

h

of

if

is

e-

ne

w, fi-

ed

og

on

e-

WN

OU

in

Just Rublished,

Modelf Attempt to prove DMHnot the Author of the Beneluic Dialogue. It a LETTER to W. J. now at the Bank. With a Caralogue of choice Books now in the Prefs.

FINIS.

[61.]

in my first publiche Paper to a halfwitted Fellow, who chose to go naked, because his old Taylor was taken up for a Pick Pocket, and could work no longer for him.

Just Publist'd,

Modest Attempt to prove Dr. Hand not the Author of the Bouchair Dialogue. In a LETTER to W. J. With a Catalogue of choice Books now in the Press.

in ke up up no

l---

gre